Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: .in the various branches of the station s activities notwithstanding adverse weather conditions. In the animal husbandry division the young cattle from the States made good development and remained in thrifty condition. A number of calves were dropped by station cows which had been bred to a registered Milking Shorthorn bull, and milk and butterfat production records were kept. Trap-nest records were continued in a study of egg production in the native hen. In the agronomy division two St. Croix sugar-cane seedlings of the 1922 series stood out prominently in a comparative test with 50 locally grown and introduced varieties as to yield of sucrose. The new seedlings give indication of producing under dry-weather conditions and are regarded as highly promising. In the horticultural division the results with Bermuda onions continued to be so encouraging as to justify growing the crop on a small commercial scale. The joint products of the several onion growers approximated 700 crates, the greater number of which were marketed in New York. Under the leadership of the horticulturist, the Virgin Islands Cooperative Bermuda Onion Growers Association was organized with an enrollment of some 20 members. The station, working through its agricultural assistant, is endeavoring to improve conditions in St. Thomas by disseminating agricultural information of value to the island and by encouraging the general use of improved farming methods. A farm-to-farm survey was made preparatory to conducting cooperative experiments with the farmers and introducing crops superior to those now grown. The...
