Excerpt: .attract the more attention, inasmuch as it is the only building among all the edifices of the place which continues standing. The point of view from which M. Linant has sketched it appeared to me interesting, because it presents a frieze and cornice in very good taste, which may give an idea of the style. The other details, with which the interior. of this building was overloaded, were in stucco plastered on the wall. These have been destroyed. by time. Some traces of the ornaments are discernible, but they are too imperfect to furnish the subject of a drawing. I sketched the same temple, placing myself in front of it, so that I might represent the details of the cornice, and the disposition of the peristyle. A paved way, which is well preserved in many places, though in others it has yielded to the plough, extends to some distance to the east of this temple, along the border of the brook of Wady Mousa. The Arabs have called this ruin the Palace of Pharaoh; indeed they have named the whole of the ruins of this ancient city from the generic appellations of the great kings. A large tomb to the west of this temple, not at all rich in decoration, but deeply excavated, accommodated the whole of us, and also afforded room for our baggage, which we arranged in hollows that were made in the side-walls of this sepulchral chamber. We established our kitchen in the...
