The Department of Commerce, built to encourage business, wants to develop the best in the various associations. Mr. Hoover expressed it when he said that the more intense industrialization of the country resulted automatically in specialization, and specialization leads to associations of specialists. The Department of Justice cannot frown upon this movement, but must keep a watchful eye lest these centralizing, movements end in restraint of trade. The business men, encouraged to co-operate but forbidden to combine, whirl around in a circle when asked to draw a line of association action which cooperates to the limit without combining. Because of this confusion, resulting from a disposition to leaning toward associations, and from fear to take action through associations, the latter have entered a new era of uncertainty which threatens...
