Other names, at the request, it was said, of Anne Boleyn, were dropped from the bill. More s escape has often been attributed to the intercession of Cromwell, its true cause was, almost certainly, 1534. April 21. the opposition of the Peers. When they had saved the aristocracy, the Lords considered that their duties ended, the attainder of the Nun and her common associates was passed, and they were executed at Tyburn. Parliament was prorogued on the 30th of March, and a commission was appointed to administer the new oaths. The clergy and the religious houses were specially required to swear; it seems that few laymen were called upon. The acceptance of the oath had been unanimous until, on the 13th of April, Fisher and More were summoned before the commissioners. They appeared singly, but their line of action was the same; both of them were willing to swear to the succession; that, they said, with exquisite constitutional instinct, was entirely at the disposal of Parliament. however, swear to the clauses which referred to They could not, the matrimonial dispensation. Cromwell would not accept their oaths to the succession only; they were both illegally committed to the Tower, without further trial, and they remained there, with varying treatment, for more than a year. An attempt was made, with inconceivable brutality, to administer the oath to the Queen. Parliament had no objection to style her Princess Dowager of Wales,...
