Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: . . . must place the reversing-lever out of gear as soon as the work has been done for which they had to move it. Drivers and firemen must, before they leave an engine in a locomotive shed or yard, see that the hand-brake is tightly screwed on, and cleaners, fitters, and others who may have to release it for pinching or repairing must see that it is again put securely on immediately the engine has been moved the required distance. Cleaners and other unauthorised persons are not permitted to move engines in steam, and anyone doing so will be at once dismissed. (By order.) S. W. Jonxsox. Locomotive Superintendent. Locomotive Department. Derby, July 1st, 1897. 7061. There again the object is to protect your workmen from injury--Certainly. 7062. I suppose, as a rule, you would find the nwn willing enough to fall in with the regulations that are made for their safety--Yes, generally speaking, that if so. 7063. I notice at the end of this circular that cleaners and other unauthorised persons are not permitted to use engines in steam, and anyone doing so will be at once dismissed--That is so. I may say we have had a good many cases where they have had to be dismissed for disobeying that regulation. 7064. Then, with respect to the engine drivers and firemen going outside their engines when in motion. That is a very important point, and what do you say upon that--It is an important...
